Introducing "Techspert"...

Nancy Victor, Techspert

Most technology blogs are written by geeks for geeks (no offense to the geeks but I'm not one of them). This is great if you are a geek and able to understand (or care) about the lingo...but what about the rest of us? Enter "Techspert". I am the President and the founder of our family run Information Technology company, Help Me!! Tech Team in San Antonio, Texas. The reason why we started our business was to fill a need at the time. In the early 1990's there was a need for easily accessible, affordable, reliable, professional computer help for everyday people and businesses. Every day since then we spend hours speaking to people about the computer issues they are having and offering help. Additionally, I myself (again being a non-geeky person) must communicate with not only the client but also the Technician (said geek) and make sense of it all. After nearly twenty years of this one learns a lot and being the giver that I am, I thought that I would share that "geek translation" service with you...the non-geek. Now...my mind does occasionally wander so you might hear the random thought on my mind like what I saw on Modern Family last night or my favorite American Idol candidate (Casey James) but I will mostly try to be helpful in a making technology understandable and relevant for non-geeky people everywhere. If you have a question please feel free to leave it for me. I will do my best to answer it and if I can't...rest assured I will summon the help of my geeky Technicians (who really aren't all that geeky).
